Assaulted His Wife.

John A. Molander, a farmer living north of town, was brought in by Officer Reinhardt on Tuesday on a charge of assault and battery perpetrated by the son-in-law. It seems that John was in town on Monday evening and got a few drinks when he went home, and it is alleged, struck and kicked his wife. John is a good, generous-hearted man when sober, but gets abusive to his family when intoxicated. Later intelligence from the home of Molander would indicate that Mrs. Molander was much worse injured than was first supposed. It appears that John attacked her with a knife. Her hands and arms are badly cut, and there is a long gash on her head, and she has two ribs broken evidently the result of John's foot work. Two doctors were in attendance on her Tuesday afternoon. Mt. Jewett News.

Miss Carrie Servatius of Kane and Mr. Walter Daniels of Smithport accompanied the happy couple. Death of John McKelrnan.

Died at his home in Keating township, near the summit of Bush Hill, on Feb. 20, 1906, at 1 p. m., John McKelrnan, of a complication of ailments.

The general feeling of sadness and regret that pervaded this community on the announcement of the death of John McKelrnan, was the first great, silent tribute to the memory of a man, who was certainly one of nature's true noblemen. The head of a family famous throughout the county for its upstanding kindliness and the warmth of its hospitality to be an acquaintance in life to be a friend. Mr. McKelrnan was a perfect representative of a type, which, alas! is becoming rare in these days of industrial and financial strife. Whole-hearted, genial, generous, always ready to help a friend in word or deed, the good deeds of John McKelrnan form a monument that will endure when fashions and fads have crumbled to dust.

Up to about a year ago Mr. McKelrnan was a healthy, rugged, hard-working man. He was stricken with stomach trouble, and although at times his condition appeared to improve, for several months it has been generally understood that his recovery was beyond hope. Nevertheless the news of his death was a sad shock as the community could not have become reconciled to the thought of losing this esteemed citizen. To the bereaved wife and children the Minister extends his tender sympathy of a loving friend.

Mr. McKelrnan was a member of the Smithport Tent, K. O. T. M.

John McKelrnan was born in County Cavan, Ireland, in 1849. He came to this country when a young boy and settled near the farm which was his home until he died. He was married in 1888 to Miss Anna Phalen of Boston. Three sons were born to them, who reside upon the farm, and were often fondly referred to by their father as his "ministry in the closing years of his life: the boys are Michael, Joseph and Charles. Four sisters also survive him: Mrs. M. O'Reilly of Keating township, Mrs. John Kane of Olean, Mrs. John Risse, Kansas City, Kansas and Mrs. Bridget Phalen of Sartwell.

Decceased was a devoted Catholic, a beloved member of St. Elizabeth's church congregation. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Father Dugan at the Swedish Lutheran church this morning at 10:30. The remains were laid to rest in St. Elizabeth's cemetery.

An Interesting Surgical Operation.

Dr. G. E. Benninghoff performed a very interesting surgical operation at the Bradford hospital on Friday morning. His patient was a colored man named Truman Reed of West Washington street, who in his youth suffered from a tumor which destroyed the bone and much of the tissue of the nose. One of the colored man's little fingers was partially disintegrated, the flesh of the member formed into the proper shape and then grafted to the face at the point where the nose should be. For some little time he will be obliged to have the hand bound to his face in order to give the grafting operation a chance to show whether it will be successful or not, before the finger is severed from the hand. Later reports indicate that the operation is proving successful.

Like Finding Money.

Former County Treasurer T. B. Clark yesterday turned over to the city of Bradford his check for $1,350, says this morning's Era. Accompanying the check was the statement that the amount was the 5 per cent. fee on retail liquor licenses granted for the city of Bradford during the years 1896 to 1898, inclusive, the years Mr. Clark held the office. In his letter Mr. Clark stated that at the time he held the office of county treasurer, he deducted the 5 per cent. fees as had been the custom, and he believed that he was entitled to the amount. Subsequently, however, his attention had been called to the fact that there was a law governing the fee question and he sent the check to the city of Bradford for the amount stated in order to set himself right.

The Two-Step Unpopular.

Instructors in dancing throughout the country are again ignoring the two-step under the name, saying it is not a dance, but a romp that may be indulged in by persons ignorant of the first real principles of dancing. A writer in a prominent publication says the two-step originated in the Bowery dance halls in New York City and a determined effort will be made by cultured exponents of graceful dancing to relegate it to its source. The day is not far distant when the stately minuet, the festive quadrille, the alluring lanciers and the always beautiful waltz quadrille will again come into their own, at least that is what the knowing ones claim. The seductive waltz will retain its popularity.

ANCIENT HISTORY.

Between 2 and 3 o'clock Friday morning, Sept. 30, 1881, the entire business portion of Eldred was destroyed by fire. It was first discovered issuing from the cellar of W. G. Robart's store in the Opera House block, and with a short time was under such headway that all hopes of saving the town were lost. The buildings were one and two story, heavy lock structures and dry as tinder. The fire spread across the street from the Opera House and ignited a building belonging to Miss Virginia, and then commenced its devastating work on both sides of the street. It made rapid work and very little attention was paid to saving the buildings, but every effort was made to remove stock and personal property to places of safety.

The losses are quite heavy and some of them are more severely felt than others. A large number of the victims had no insurance, whatever, and everything was burned, leaving them entirely destitute. The total loss will reach $100,000. It is a sad blow to Eldred as she was just in her prime. However her business men are enterprising and will no doubt soon have buildings under way that will far surpass the former structures when completed.

Saturday, Oct. 1, 1881, the church bells tolled the sad tidings that Anna Gramblin had passed away. It was such a short time previous to the announcement of her death that she was on the streets mingling with her playmates and enjoying her usual good health that the announcement of her death seemed almost incredible. The Sunday previous she prepared herself and attended Sunday school, returning home in company with some of her schoolmates. In the afternoon she said to a lady stopping at the house, "I am going to die, but don't tell mamma." Nothing was thought of when she complained of being sick, and a doctor was called who pronounced it diphtheria. She lingered along, occasionally calling her mother to see God "just over there" waiting for her, until between four and five o'clock Saturday afternoon when Jesus took her to abide with him.

Little Anna was eleven years and eight months of age; she had a kind and loving disposition. For many years she had been a cripple and by her tender and loving nature gained the admiration and sympathy of all who knew her, and many fond friends will sincerely mourn her absence. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Gramblin, and their affliction is of the most terrible kind.

The funeral services were held at the residence last Sunday. She was laid to rest in Rose Hill cemetery.

G. W. King, who for some time past has been a patient in the Elmira Surgical Institute, has returned home. He was fast losing his eyesight when he went away, but has been entirely cured; we understand. (Oct., 1881.)

Sandford—Deanna—Married at the M. E. parsonage, Sept. 28, 1881, by Rev. W. B. Wagoner, Mr. Jackson Sandford and Miss Lizzie P. Deanna, both of Franklin, Pa.

Wash. Stark has put up a building at the big bridge near Alto and intends to make a fortune by disposing cigars and tobacco at that point. Success to him.

Paul Edwards, a little son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Tracy, living near the McKean & E. depot, was buried on Tuesday, Oct. 20, 1881. He was first taken with diphtheria and terminated with gastric fever, causing the little fellow's death. He was a bright child, and the parents have the sympathy of all in their great affliction.

Will J. Soule and Mrs. M. E. Cole, both of Alto, were united in wedlock at the Rockwell House, on Saturday, Oct. 15, 1881, by Rev. W. C. Wilcox. Adams, the popular clerk at that house, created a battle of the best imported for the contracting parties, and says he will repeat the act on like occasions.

On Monday, Oct. 17, 1881, the event of opening the Grand Central to the public occurred. Mr. Higginth, the popular conductor of the house, invited many of his friends to dine with him on the occasion, all of whom enjoyed his hospitality most heartily. It is a model house, has a model landlord, and there is no reason why it should not do a large business. The clerk, Mr. Williams, is obliging and popular, and everything will be done to make the Grand Central second to no hotel in the state.

Moore—Died at the residence of her son, A. J. Barker, on Tuesday, Oct. 11, 1881, Mrs. Elizabeth Moore, aged 77 years and 6 months.

A pleasant wedding occurred at the Bennett House on Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 25, 1881, between 1 and 2 o'clock, the contracting parties being Mr. T. J. Humes, of this place, and Mrs. Anna Copley of Sawyer City, Rev. E. P. Hubbell officiating. A large number of invited guests were present, and everything passed off in the most cheerful manner. The happy couple left on the 2 o'clock train for a brief wedding trip. They will take up their residence in town.

Longworth-Roosevelt Nuptials.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON D. C., Feb. 17, 1906. The wheels of business stopped in Washington today while the daughter of the President was led to the altar. Miss Alice Roosevelt was married to Representative Nicholas Longworth at 4 o'clock today by Bishop Satterlee and all of Washington, not hidden to the White House for the ceremony watched and waited while the nuptials were performed. It was the most notable wedding that the Capital has ever known. Miss Roosevelt was the third White House bride. This in itself was a distinction. But never before has a White House wedding attracted such attention. Never before has there been such a distinguished gathering of society people in the mansion and certainly never before has there been such an array of wedding gifts. Every country in the civilized world, even if China is included in that category was represented in the tributes that were showered on the bride. Representative Longworth too was remembered.

The executive offices in the White House were closed all day. There was no business transacted for the first time since Mr. Roosevelt has been President. Promptly at 10 a. m. the gates of the White House were closed, and thereafter there was no entrance without one of the magic admission cards. There was a little short of a thousand guests present, a gathering that crowded to the utmost the East Room where the ceremony was performed. Only two representatives of the press were present, the three members of the local papers, the three representatives of the national press, the three representatives of the foreign press, and the three representatives of the "Representative Longworth" press. There were the members of the cabinet, the members of the Supreme Court and members of the cabinet, the members of the Senate who had formerly held cabinet positions, and the general run of invited guests who included most of the people of prominence whose names usually appear in the society columns of the New York papers.

The wedding ceremony was performed by Bishop Satterlee under an arch of palms on the west side of the East Room. There would have been a jangle of harmony about the improvised altar but for the firm protest made by the bride-to-be yesterday. She had put her foot down firmly against having the whole scene shut off by palms and ferns from the very people who had come to witness it, and at her order the taller palms had been moved back to the wall so that there was a reasonably clear space in front.

The service was brief but impressive as the words and the occasion warranted. The party moved almost immediately afterward to the breakfast room where there was a buffet luncheon for the most of the guests in the Blue Room. The newly married couple, President and Mrs. Roosevelt and about sixty of the guests sat down to the wedding breakfast in the Green Room. The breakfast lasted well into the afternoon. Then came the most interesting and least advertised part of the performance. Mr. Longworth and his bride quietly faced themselves and left the house in an electric brougham, one of a dozen precisely alike, that were parked back of the White House. In it they drove away to the country house where they will spend the honeymoon.

This part of the performance was distinctly not on the program. There had been a deal of speculation for a week or so as to the plans of the young couple. It had been all arranged for them that they were to go south and spend a week or two in Florida. But it was well known what publicity this would entail and what inconvenience well meant courtesy on the part of the public would cause. So a personal friend of the family, himself a resident of Washington, offered the use of his country place just outside of the city and when Mr. and Mrs. Longworth left the White House they did so quietly and drove direct to the residence that had been prepared for them. They will remain there about a week and then return to Washington. During the whole time they will never be out of direct telephone communication with the White House and within easy automobile distance of it. This part of affairs was not known to many of the correspondents in Washington and elaborate preparations had been made to track the couple to their private car on one of the southern roads. But the plans of a number of enterprising newspapers went wrong at the last moment and the bride and groom will in all probability be enabled to enjoy a week or so of each other's society uninterrupted by newspapers or the inquiries of any but their intimate friends.

CATHOLIC BAZAAR OPENING.

At the Lyceum Last Night was a Social and Financial Success.

A VARIETY OF ENTERTAINMENTS.

Card Party To-Night—Home Talent Vaudeville Friday Night—Dance On Saturday Night.

The St. Elizabeth's church bazaar opened in a blaze of glory at the Lyceum last night and a large crowd was on hand to give it a rousing send-off.

The various committees have labored long and faithfully to make their various departments complete and the opening night showed their efforts to have been successful. Beginning at 6:30 yesterday afternoon a hot chicken supper was served on the stage and many people were on hand to partake of the delicious eatables. Supper was also served during the evening for the accommodation of the dancers.

The interior of the Lyceum is patriotically decorated with flags and bunting, set off with a tasteful arrangement of Chinese lanterns. On the right of the entrance is the fancy work booth, where beautiful articles can be obtained at small cost. The candy booth is on the left and was presided over by a bevy of pretty girls. This booth did a good business and disposed of all the stock on hand early in the evening.

At 8 o'clock the inspiring music of the Lyceum orchestra filled the floor with dancers and kept things moving during the evening. The orchestra is giving its patrons the best there is going in the musical line and certainly made a hit.

The dancers enjoyed themselves thoroughly until about 1:30 a. m. and everybody was pleased with the successful opening of the bazaar.

To-night a card party will be the attraction and refreshments will be served. Playing commenced at 8:30 o'clock. The Lyceum orchestra will furnish music.

The following program will be given at the Lyceum to-morrow evening in connection with St. Elizabeth's bazaar: Solo, Will O. Day.

Instrumental solo, Mrs. H. C. Wells. Solo, Miss Edna Neil.

Magic, Harris Somers, assisted by his wife, Wanderling Ball. Mystery, "Money from Everywhere." The Bird. Imitation of The Great Lafayette and the Lion. The Deacon Changes His Mind. Elpis.

At the conclusion of the entertainment to-morrow evening a chicken supper will be served, which you cannot afford to miss.

Saturday night a hot chicken supper will be served commencing at 5:30 o'clock. Another dance will be given that evening with music by Chadwick's orchestra.

The worthy object of this bazaar should insure continued liberal patronage throughout the week. The congregation of St. Elizabeth's church is working hard to provide funds for the erection of a new edifice to take the place of the one destroyed by fire and are certainly deserving of the help of all.

Former Smithport Man Advanced.

From the Mansfield (Ohio) Daily Shield we learn that our former townsman, J. P. Olmstead, has been promoted by the Logan Natural Gas Co. from manager of the Shelby plant to manager of the Mansfield plant. In speaking of the promotion the Shelby Globe makes some very complimentary remarks as to Mr. Olmstead's ability as a manager and of his personal popularity, which will be pleasing to his many friends in Smithport.

"Up from Slavery."

Among the several families of colored people in Kane, the name of Young is conspicuous. None of our citizens but have long known "Uncle Scipio" Young and his estimable wife. But one fact has been almost overlooked. It is this, that these people lived in slavery until well in middle life and reared a family all of whom except two were born under the curse of slave ownership.

In recent conversation with Henry Young, the oldest son of this family, it was learned that all the children but Grant and Thomas were cradled in the Virginia slave home. When the Civil war broke out Scipio Young took active part and for two years his family had no tidings of him. He then returned and soon after planned to come to Pennsylvania.

The Youngs were among the best class of colored people in the Old Dominion and the numerous family of sons and daughters have come up in the fear of the Lord and honor of their fellow men. Henry is a man somewhat past 50 years of age. He is a deacon in the A. M. B. church of Kane, and not infrequently leads the Sunday service. One daughter is the wife of a prominent resident of Washington, D. C.

The Young family has indeed made its way "up from slavery" in an honest and honorable way. Kane Leader. Thus, J. Young of this place is a member of this family.

A Plan to the Girls.

Although there are many advantages for the average young man of the present day, these advantages in a great majority are not so copious with the long green that many young men can afford to marry a woman, then hire a girl and keep a nurse, says the Knoxville Courier. The price of every young woman should be to know how to cook and cook right, how to arrange and keep the house attractive, and every other branch of good house-keeping. There are girls who boast of their ignorance of domestic science and treat the subject as though the knowledge would be degrading. Such girls make poor wives even for rich men. The girl who aids her mother and studies to excel in home life is a girl good enough for any man's wife. Many young women are filling positions of responsibility as business life, but no young woman should enter business life until she has been thoroughly trained by her mother in the art of domestic science.

Comfort vs. Style.

A lady received the following reply from a neighbor in reply to a question as to why she allowed her children and husband to litter up every room in the house, and the sentiment will find lodgment in the hearts of every home-loving person in the land. "The marks of those little muddy feet on the floor can be easier removed than the stain of those little feet when they go down into the highways of evil. The prints of the little fingers on the window pane cannot shut out the sunshine half so much as the shadow that darkens a mother's heart over one who is but a nurse in the coming years. And if my John finds his home a refuge from care and trouble, and his greatest happiness within its walls, he can put his boots in the rocking chair and hang his coat on the floor every day in the week. And if I can stand it and he enjoys it, I cannot see that it is anybody else's business."

The Trail of a Valentine

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1905, by Charles W. Hooker

It was a surprise to Mr. Bailey that the office of a detective agency should present an aspect so wholesome and so ordinary. He had pictured it a shabby den of tricksters whose trade was deservingly ill-paid, and he had come upon an impulse wholly at variance with the usual currents of his life, dwelling in the street door in the summer of a man who makes his first distressful visit to a pawnshop.

Mr. Bailey was one of those men in whose knowledge of life there are blank spaces. In his case these gaps were due to obscurity. When he had a prejudice against a person, a place or an occupation he seemed deliberately to cultivate ignorance and to shut information, as if upon a scruple of conscience. Because of this peculiarly his notion of a detective's share in the world's activities had become constantly more absurd from the day when he first attempted to dissuade a certain young man from choosing that profession. To this young man he had now come as a client, surely at the spur of no small need.

Upon the receipt of Mr. Bailey's card Harry Bertrand dropped a half read letter and made all haste to usher in his visitor. The obvious sincerity of the welcome went far to relieve Mr. Bailey of embarrassment, and the businesslike appearance of the inner office helped still further to put him at his ease.

"Harley," said he, somewhat in the manner of the old days when he was legal counsel to Bertrand and distant affectionate—Harley, I'm glad to see you so well situated. You must be getting on."

"Truly well, I thank you, Uncle John," responded Bertrand. "And how is it with you? At least you've grown no older in the year since I've seen you."

"It needn't have been so long," said Bailey. "I'm afraid you took our differences too much to heart and thought that I—"

"Well, you might have known that I didn't want you to stop coming to the house."

"He's very kind of you to say so," continued Bailey defensively, "and I don't like your occupation. That's a fact that can't be altered, but we needn't quarrel about it. Well be debarr'd from that in future any way, because I've come to consult you professionally, which may seem to put me out of the argument."

"Unless I fail to help you," said Bertrand. "Well, I'm bound to admit that if you fail I can't blame you," responded Bailey. "I'm prepared to hear you say at

"I'M GLAD TO SEE YOU SO WELL SITUATED," once that the thing is impossible. It's a matter of some delicacy and one that I couldn't discuss with a stranger."

Bertrand looked dubiously across the desk at the white haired, kindly old man, who was beginning with nervous fingers to undo the cord around a square, thin packet. When the wrapping was removed there appeared a frame of white cardboard with a design in colors and gilt illustrating a photograph which upon inspection proved to be a reproduction of a detail from a painting of Chartrain's, a Brittany peasant girl holding a bridle-rein in her hands.

"This thing seems to be a valentine," said the detective, "if one may judge by the design upon the frame."

"That's what it is," responded Bailey, "and a fine one, as you'll admit. My daughter got it by mail yesterday, and I want you to find out who sent it."

"I shall ask for no further evidence on that point," responded Bertrand. "But there was another question—"

"No. She hasn't expressed a wish that you should investigate this matter. She doesn't know that it is being investigated. But I am doing only my plain duty in trying to find out whether this is the beginning of further attentions on the part of young Steve Temple."

"I knew his father for a rascal; I knew the son for another. I sent him about his business once, and I am prepared to do it again."

"Pardon me for saying that I think you took too serious a view of this matter a year ago," said Bertrand, with hesitation. "I did not believe at that time that Charlotte felt any deeper sentiment than a certain natural recognition of the fact that Temple is a very handsome fellow. He has the gift of fascination."

"He has the gift of all the vices that disgrace humanity," said Bailey, with decision. "He inherited them. But this is not prejudice on my part. I looked him up. I know him to the backbone."

"What reason have you for supposing that Temple sent this?"

"It looks foreign to me, and he's been abroad. He has just got back. No other young man of Charlotte's acquaintance has been across the water. I think Temple bought this on the other side and brought it over with him."

"The anatomy of these Cupids suggests Germany surely," said he.

"Temple's been there," said Bailey. "There was a picture of a girl in a paper which was folded like a letter, and the frame and the photograph. The frame held it up to the light and reflected out to Bailey's eyes."

"What's the girl's name?" asked Bailey.

"Charlotte," declared Bailey. "Of course, I don't really know anything. I can't open my mouth without having something more definite. But how to get it? This valentine was mailed in this city. I saw the post mark on the envelope. But there's no way of finding out who mailed it. The address was typewritten."

Bertrand spent half a minute in meditation, rubbing his yellow hair into a strange tangle meaningfully. Then he slowly walked to the steam radiator in the corner and laid the valentine upon it.

"There is another point," said he. "You may remember that about a year ago your cousin Mrs. Ewing was visiting you just after returning from abroad. She had a photograph reproduced of the picture of which we have here a detail. Charlotte carried very little for the picture as a whole, but she admired this particular figure."

"I remember," said Bailey. "She tried to find a large photograph of the painting in this city, but couldn't. It is the likeliest thing in the world that she told Temple that he found this somewhere in Europe."

"My excellent alleged uncle," said Bertrand, smiling. "There is no difficulty at all in the matter. Barring the lock which may defeat the detective, nothing is impossible and to all intents and purposes, for you and me, prevent the sup from rising tomorrow."

"I will show you the way to obtain positive proof as to who sent this valentine, and I'll do it without rising from my chair."

"Now, then, in the first place, we'll consult the valentine itself. How was it made?"

"Be a good soul!" cried Bailey. "I can't know anything about the technical details of getting up such a thing."

"You can see, however, that it never was made to hold this photograph. There's nothing to hold it. It's pasted on, and very crudely. Didn't that strike your eye? See how neatly all the rest of it is put up. Contrast that with the pasting. What do you make of it?"

"Well, I don't know, really. I don't know," repeated Bailey, alternately peering at the back of the valentine and at the face of the detective.

"There was another picture here originally," said Bertrand. "It was attached in a different way from this one. The frame was made in two parts, back and front. The picture was laid between them, and they were glued together. If you look closely you can see that that picture was cut out with the sharp point of a penknife probably, and then this one was added to the back so that it shows all right from the other side. It was done very recently, long after the original valentine was made."

"But," said Bailey. "How do you know that?"

"The paste is not thoroughly dry. The heat of the radiator has wrinkled the edges of the photograph even with only a few minutes' trial. But the heat has had no effect upon the older portion."

"If the man had bought the picture and the frame abroad he would have done this work long ago. Indeed, with so much time at his disposal he probably would have had some more skillful workman do it for him. I infer that the idea of sending this picture as a valentine came to him suddenly at the last moment and that he hunted through the stores for a frame that would fit it. That means that the frames were imported by some firm in this country, most probably in this city. There are only a very few in that line of business. It will take us only a little while to talk to them by telephone."

"This task Bertrand delegated to an assistant, who within twenty minutes gave him the name of the firm importing the valentines of which the frame in question was a part and a list of nine stores where they were sold at retail.

"But the clerk won't remember," objected Bailey. "In the rush of this valentine business how will a salesman be able to tell who bought one of these things? Probably a dozen or more were sold."

"Our particular purchaser," said Bertrand, "was looking not merely for a pretty valentine, but for one into which this photograph could be fitted. Undoubtedly he carried the photograph with him and told the salesman what he was hunting for. That will fix the purchaser in the salesman's memory. At any rate, we'll try."

He called up four of the stores without result, but from the fifth he obtained a favorable reply.

"They have sent for the salesgirl," said Bertrand. "Suppose you speak with her." And Bailey, who was already leaning across the desk, snatched the telephone eagerly.

"Hello!" he cried after a brief interval of impatience. "Hello! Are you the young lady who sold a valentine to a man who wanted to paste a photograph into it? What did he look like?"

"Very handsome? Yes. Go on. . . . Light hair and blue eyes. . . . You say he didn't have any mustache or beard. What? Spell

"HARLEY! GOOD HEAVENS!"

"Swell, eh? How big he is? . . . Very tall. Over six feet. . . . Anything more that you remember?"

There was a pause, and then Bailey turned to the detective with an eager grin.

"What eyes these silly girls have! She says he wore a dark green necktie." Then to the telephone. "Thank you—thank you very much." And again to Bertrand, after hanging up the receiver. "Well, that settles it, and you have done a great piece of work for me. It's Temple beyond a doubt. He must have shaved off his mustache. Otherwise it's the man to the life. I can foresee another painful interview with that young scamp."

"It occurs to me," said Bertrand thoughtfully, "that perhaps. . . . But I have no right to advise in such a matter."

"Yes, you have," responded Bailey. "Go right ahead. I've got some few ideas about the value of your advice. Let's have it, my dear boy."

"I am in it fair way of business here," said Bertrand, looking around the office. "My income seems well assured, and besides I have made fortunate investments. My little property which you managed so well when I was a boy has grown more rapidly than you would readily believe."

"I'm glad to hear it, my dear fellow. But what the deuce has this to do with?"

"It is in my mind that if I might see Charlotte and speak to her as my heart would prompt me."

There was a long silence, the two men looking intently into each other's eyes. Then Bailey suddenly stretched out his hand.

"I thought of this years ago, Harley," said he, "when you were a lad and she a child. At my knee, I thought of it many times afterwards, but somehow it just won't come back to me today. Perhaps I've been a fool."

"You do yourself a great injustice, uncle," responded Bertrand, with a smile. "Your intellectual powers may not perfectly fit you for the detective's profession, but—"

"Don't crow over me, my boy," exclaimed Bailey. "Do you know I think I should have worked this problem out just as you did if I'd really set my mind to it? It looks very simple."

Bertrand shook his head.

"No, uncle, no," said he. "By one detail of this affair I see clearly that you weren't cut out for a detective. Your inferences are swayed by previous opinion, not by the reasonable probabilities." He checked a remonstrance with a wave of his hand. "Let us illustrate. The essence of this case, it seems to me, was that Charlotte had expressed a desire for a certain picture, which was subsequently sent to her anonymously. Now, there are two tall men with light hair and blue eyes, one wearing a mustache the last time he was seen, the other always smooth shaven. The man wanted in this case is described by an eyewitness as having no hair upon his face. Moreover, a dark green necktie is mentioned, and at this very moment one of our tall, light men is wearing such a tie. Again, we know positively that Charlotte mentioned her desire for this picture to one of these men, and we only guess that she may have spoken of it to the other."

"Yet despite all these indications, you persist in believing that the man who is not known to have shaved off his mustache or to have worn a dark green tie or even to have heard that Charlotte admired a certain picture is the one who sent that valentine. Can you wonder, then, that I told you for a very bad detective?"

"Harley! Good heavens! Do you mean?"

"Certainly, uncle. I sent that valentine to Charlotte myself. We had a talk about it by telephone while you were on your way to the office. She called me up on suspicion, to use the language of my aunt. And some words she said to me in thanking me for my little remembrance raised my hope that you need think no more of Stephen Temple."

"Difference and Distinction. Most people are afraid to be different. Some people are different for the express purpose of showing that they are not afraid. And then there are a few who are big enough not to care whether they are different or not. They are the ones that win out, but also times out of ten they do things in the ordinary way. Judge."

Usually.

Jack—Hello, Fred! Had your hair cut? Fred—Yes, old fellow. I found a place where they cut your hair while you wait. Jack—That's good. A barber's shop is usually a place where they cut some other man's hair while you wait.

THE STAGE CENSOR.

In England Plays Must Be Approved Before Public Production.

Before a play may be given publicly in England permission to perform it must first be obtained from the lord chamberlain.

A copy of every new play intended for production must be sent to the lord chamberlain seven clear days before the date of the first performance, together with a fee of 1 guinea if the play consists of less than three acts, or 2 guineas if in three or more acts. This copy need not necessarily be typewritten, but it must be clearly written, otherwise the manuscript may be returned with a polite request to submit something that may be deciphered. Such a delay might lead to serious complications, so it is as well to do the thing properly at the start. It should also be borne in mind that they do not give credit at St. James' and that the fee must accompany the manuscript. It will not do to send it on afterwards, as such a proceeding would be sure to result in a complete impasse. The fee is for the reading, and the official reader is the judge who passes the play for performance or prohibits it, as the case may be. The lord chamberlain is only an imposing figurehead in the matter—a nominal official.

Well, supposing your play contains nothing objectionable, then the manager of the theater where the play is to be produced will duly receive an elaborate form of certificate empowering him to produce the play in question. The wording of this is as follows: "I, having been represented to me by the examiner of all theatrical entertainments that a manuscript entitled 'Crimson Footsteps,' or 'The Blood Stained Tennis Court,' being a drama in seven acts, does not contain in its general tenor anything immoral or otherwise improper for the stage. I, the lord chamberlain of his majesty's household, do, by virtue of my office and in pursuance of the act of parliament in that behalf provided, allow the performance of the said manuscript at your theater, with the exception of all words and passages which are specified by the examiner in the intimation of this license and without any further variations whatever." Then follows the sign manual of the lord chamberlain and in the bottom left hand corner, "To the Manager of the Royal Jubilee Theatre."

These manuscripts are all bound and placed in the dramatic library, and the ordinary course of things they are parted with under any copy you wish. If you lose your own copy must apply and pay for another copy of the one in the possession of the lord chamberlain. In the case of a contemplated change of the title of a play notice of this must be sent to the lord chamberlain before the change is made. Also in the case of additional alterations, notice should be given, otherwise the authorities have the right to stop the performance of such a play. Antinomies must also be licensed.

The managers of provincial theaters are held responsible for the plays performed in their houses by touring companies, and are supposed to satisfy themselves that such plays have been duly licensed—London Times.

FAMILY HISTORY.

Universal Interest in Knowing What Our Forefathers Did.

"Why don't you trace your family history?" The common reply to this question is summed up in the words, "If I know how to go about it I should enjoy doing so." For few are the individuals who do not at times feel a longing to open the book of the past and read the records of their ancestors. Edward Everett felt that longing when he wrote, "There is no man of any culture who does not take some interest in what was done by his forefathers." The desire to trace the descent of one's family and to transmit the record to one's successors is as old as life—a strand in the binding cord of filial love.

So prevalent has the desire been among all nations to which either history or tradition extends that it has been regarded by many writers as an instinct in human nature. Observing its universality, the historian Hume began his history of England with these lines: "The curiosity entertained by all nations of inquiring into the exploits and adventures of their ancestors commonly excites a regret that the history of the ages should be involved in obscurity, uncertainty and tradition."—New England Magazine.

How to Reveal the Secret of Oyster. Select large oysters and have them scrubbed thoroughly, then place them in the oven in a large tin with the round side of the shells down, so that when they open the liquor will not be lost. As soon as they do open remove the upper shell, sprinkle them with salt, pepper and chopped parsley, add a little butter and serve hot as possible on a bed of water cress. Oysters served in this way make an excellent first course at dinner if accompanied by thin slices of brown bread and butter.

A Counter Attraction. A recent visitor to Beaconsfield churchyard asked a middle aged native of the village to be directed to the graves of Burke and Waller. The man said he had no recollection of any such persons having been buried there. "But," he added, "you see that little chemist's shop over there? That's the shop where Devereux, the trunk murder man, used to be an apprentice!"

In Her Own Coat. Mamma: You naughty boy! What do you mean by saying "Don't bother me now" when I asked you how you got your clothes mended? Tommy: That is what you always say when I ask you something you don't know how to answer.

Right in Line. "If there is anything I like," said he to his wife, "it is a woman who knows enough to be a good listener." Whereat the servant girl at the keyhole could not repress a smile of satisfaction.

Shortsighted Animals.
So far as naturalists have been able to ascertain there is no such thing as shortsight among animals in a state of nature. In the case, however, of domestic animals and wild ones, confinement shortsight is by no means unknown. Many people who have dogs and cats will remember instances of pets which were unable to distinguish friends from strangers at a short distance. Horses, too, frequently suffer from shortsight and other derangements of the vision, and this kind of thing is sometimes met with in the case of cattle. The disease of the eyes which frequently affects wild animals especially are to be chiefly attributed to the narrow space in which they are confined. The eyes are never exercised upon distant objects and therefore the powers which use of this kind of exercise

The glowworm cavern.
The greatest wonder of the antipodes is the celebrated glowworm cavern, discovered in 1801 in the heart of Tasmanian wilderness. The way to the cavern has to be a tedious march of many hours in the vicinity, each separate and distinct are situated near town of Southport, Tasmania; a limestone bluff, about four miles high. The appearance of the cavern is that of an underground river, the entire floor of the subterranean passage being covered with water about a foot and a half in depth. These deep pools resemble the surface of a lake, and are bordered in limestone formation, with the exception that their sides literally shine with the emitted by the millions of glowworms which inhabit them.

Nose Drinking in Norway.
The Norwegian papers tell of a speedy and efficacious method of becoming intoxicated prevailing in slums of Christiania. The Oreflader describes how it is done. The drunk fills the palm of his hand with "ric" (strong corn brandy) and so through his nose. A few applications of the work while the same ap-

The effect of it is terrible, as it causes the whole nervous system to be paralyzed in a moment, and the drinker remains almost unconscious for several minutes. Afterward a state of fatigue is felt, as after smoking of

Only Five Survived.
A series of grewsome incidents had terrified all English neighborhood. What made these incidents peculiarly horrible was their tragic mystery. No body could explain them. Sheep and lambs, which were in full health one morning, were found the next morning lying on their backs, unharmed, but denuded of every drop of blood! Gloubs and rumples and all imaginable horrors were blatted, and the whole country-side was up. The damage continued, and in a single night it farmer had fourteen out of twenty-one lambs killed, and the same pen was chosen the next night, and the remaining seven lambs were destroyed. In the early part of day the players were discovered, all hideous from the "wonderful work," the "monstrous method" of the "monsters," but a couple of pine martens, which, having routed a pair of wangle from their nest, had there made their home and thence nightly scourged the country round about.

"One year married, he swings the jump handle more slowly, smokes occasionally and seems to be annoyed to catch the mail as late. "Two years married, he looks sour and glum; nicks the coat over the coal house and looks at the house as if it would like to choke somebody. "Three years married, he sits on the doorstep and smokes while his wife works the jump handle."—Kansas City Journal.

Smethport, Thursday, Feb. 22, 1906.

The Independent Democrat, etc., candidate for Mayor of Pittsburgh, Gen. W. Guthrie, was elected on Tuesday by a plurality of about 6,000.

Nine persons met a violent death in New York on Sunday in different parts of the city. There were murders, suicides and accidental deaths in the list.

Another innocent young girl has been brutally murdered by a negro in Louisiana. The suspect was arrested and lodged in jail. Lynching was averted because proof of his guilt was not conclusive.

JOHN A. McCALL, late president of the New York Life Insurance Co., died Sunday afternoon from enlargement of the liver, aged 57 years. His death is undoubtedly due to the recent insurance investigation. He was compelled to sell his home to repay the insurance company $250,000 on the Andrew Hamilton account and shortly after the investigation he was taken ill, which resulted in his death.

AFTER 15 years of more or less serious consideration of the subject the Senate yesterday passed a pure food bill by the decisive vote of 63 to 4. This bill makes it a misdemeanor to manufacture or sell adulterated foods, drugs, medicines, or liquors in the District of Columbia, the Territories and the insular possessions of the United States and prohibits the shipment of such goods from one State to another or to a foreign country.

FRED D. GALLUP, Esq., of Smethport, has been urged by many friends to be a candidate for the assembly on the Republican ticket and has finally decided to make the run. His decision on this subject was learned by The Era yesterday and it is with pleasure that announcement of the fact is made here. Mr. Gallup is an able attorney, a popular citizen and to the voters he is known as an honest, upright, trustworthy man. If elected he will fulfill his official duties in an efficient and satisfactory manner. His friends throughout the county are numerous and there is good reason for his supporters believing that he will easily win the nomination and election.

Now that the borough election is over it is up to the people of Smethport to vote their energies to bringing the paving question in proper form before the March meeting of the borough council. As the members of that body are supposed to act for the best interests of the town they should be unanimously in favor of this question. The paving proposition is altogether too important to be neglected and the public should realize the great benefit and improvement that a paved street would be to the town. The conditions have been fully explained and they are more favorable now than they may ever be. It is time for the people to make up their minds what they are going to do about it.

THREE prominent miners have been arrested in Colorado charged with the murder of Gov. Steenbergen of Idaho. They are Charles H. Meyer, president, and William D. Heywood, secretary and treasurer of the Western Federation of Miners, and O. A. Pettibone, former member of the executive committee of that organization. It appears that the men were directly charged with the murder of former Governor Frank Steenbergen of Idaho. The complaints charge the accused men with having discharged the bomb by means of which Steenbergen was killed at Caldwell, Idaho, Dec. 23, 1905. The specific charge of murder was made to forestall habeas corpus proceedings, but no attempt will be made to prove that they were in Idaho at the time of the commission of the crime. It is alleged, however, that they conspired with others to murder Steenbergen and furnished funds to carry out the plot. The arrests and unsolved murders committed during the labor troubles in the Cripple Creek and Telluride regions of Colorado and to the Coeur d'Alene region of Idaho, together with the recent Steenbergen assassination form a chain of crimes, with which efforts are being made to connect officers of the Western Federation of Miners through the confession said to have been made by Harry Orchard, who is in jail, charged with the Steenbergen murder. Orchard is said to have confessed that wholesale assassinations were planned at the headquarters of the Western Federation of Miners, in Denver, chiefly by refugees from the camps at Cripple Creek and Telluride. It is also said that Orchard's confession gives a history of the explosion at Cripple Creek on June 6, 1904, when 14 men were killed. Gov. McDonald, who issued papers for the extradition of the Federation officers to Idaho, said that he had read a copy of Orchard's alleged confession, but was not at liberty to divulge its contents.

According to an article in the Austin Autograph it is the intention of the Italian government to punish its countrymen who commit crimes and then return to Italy to avoid trial in this country. If the Italian authorities carry out this program the victims of a number of cold blooded murders in this country may yet be avenged. The article in part says: "Frank Gasbia, the Duomo murderer, who shot Enrico DeBacco, at Cross Fork on Sunday, April 3, 1905, and whose death occurred in the Austin hospital a few days afterwards, is to be tried for the crime in his own country. District Attorney A. R. Ensworth has received a letter from the Italian Consul, residing in Philadelphia, which enclosed a copy of a decree from the King's Council of the High Court of Appeals of the criminal court sitting at Palermo, Province of De Aquila, Italy, in which it is recited that Frank Gasbia Gasbia has been arrested and is now in prison at Palermo, upon information furnished by the officials by letters received from Cross Fork, this country, charging him with having committed the crime of murder upon the person of Enrico DeBacco on Sunday morning, April 3, 1905, during the riot which resulted in the killing of one person and the almost fatal shooting of Louis DeMarco and Genio DeBacco on Sunday morning. This decree asked the Court of Quarter Sessions of Potter county to appoint a commissioner to examine the witnesses who were present at the murder, the doctors who performed the autopsy upon the body of Enrico DeBacco and all other persons who gave testimony at the trial of Louis DeMarco, June Sessions, 1905. Before they can go on with the trial, it will be necessary to have more evidence than that contained in these letters, therefore the Court of Appeals of Italy has asked the Court here to appoint a commissioner to examine the witnesses, and the Court here has accordingly appointed Attorney A. M. Devall to take the testimony.

Franklin's Sawdust Pudding.
 Franklin believed in fair competition, in freedom for others as well as himself, and cared more for his personal independence in the conduct of his business than for the business itself. The story of the sawdust pudding should be known in every newspaper office in the country. When he first started the Gazette he made some free comments on certain "public" officials, and some of the influential patrons of the paper resented it and tried to stop it. He invited them to dinner. When they came they found nothing on the table but a pudding made of sawdust and a jug of water. They sat down. Franklin then placed plates and then his own and proceeded to eat heartily, but the guests could not swallow the stuff. After a few moments Franklin rose and looking at them, said quietly: "My friends, any man who can sustain an argument as long as I can, needs no man's patronage." American Illustrated Magazine.

A Scheme and a Luncheon.
 One of Balzac's wild schemes was a plan to combine Paris theatres. One morning in September, 1880, an early day to him, of monopolies, ten literary friends of the great novelist met by invitation at his house. Before luncheon Balzac told them of his scheme. His idea was to form a trust to buy up all the theatres as a sequel to a smaller preliminary trust for the supply of plays to every theatre in Paris. The ten guests were to supply them. He estimated the profits of the first year at $120,000, and each year would, he thought, bring in more money. He expounded his scheme at length for over an hour, and finally one of the guests suggested that he might go on at table. The novelist started. "I forgot all about ordering anything to eat," he cried, and late in the afternoon the members of the shadowy trust made a shadowy meal of bread and cheese and sour wine in a small country restaurant.

He Wore the Robe.
 A story is told of the late Dr. Peckie, a Scotch minister, to whom his congregation had presented a pulpit robe. He had never worn a robe, and, after acknowledging the gift, he said he would wait in the vestry five minutes after service to hear any objections to the innovation. Nobody appeared, but one old lady, who, on being asked what her objections were, answered that she had read the epistles of St. Paul and could not find any reference to the apostle wearing a gown. "What epistle did you read?" asked the doctor. "From Romans to Hebrews," answered the old lady. "Well, Janet," said her minister, "I have read from Romans to Hebrews, also, and I could never find any reference to the apostle wearing the breeches. What would you think if you saw me going into the pulpit without breeches?" No reply to say; the old lady departed satisfied with the explanation.

Oxford Stories.
 A nervous freshman was dining with Thomas Herbert Warren, president of Magdalen college, Oxford. By way of starting conversation the latter glanced out of the window and remarked, "We have a little sun today." But he was astonished to receive the freshman's congratulations, coupled with the hope that Mrs. Warren was doing well.

Another Oxford story: During his undergraduate days a man who is now a noted professor was discovered sitting in the "common" clothed only in an umbrella which he held above his head. In response to anxious inquiries as to what he was doing he replied: "Fush, hush! Don't you see I'm a badly mushroom and I'm growing?"
